Director's Note

With the production of "A Doll's House" in 1879, western theatre changed forever. The play was based on the real case of a woman, Laura Keiler, who, to pay for her husband's tuberculosis treatments, illegally borrowed money and couldn't pay it back. When her husband found out, he had her separated from her children, including the baby she was nursing at the time, committed to an asylum and he divorced her. Two years later he begged her to come back to him. She did so for the sake of the children.

Ibsen uses this basis to write what, at the outset, is typical melodrama of the time. A good woman does a bad thing for a good reason and, while she has to suffer for it, is finally vindicated when her husband forgives her and, under the conventions of the time, they should live happily ever after. At this point Ibsen threw his audience a curve and announced to the world that theatre was no longer just for entertainment, but that the theatre could also address contemporary social problems and reflect real life.

The effect was immediate. Editorials were written to the major newspapers of the day stating that Ibsen had turned the theatre into a sewer. Notices were put up at parties announcing "It is forbidden to discuss A Doll's House here." In Italy, the final scene was re-written so that there would be a happy ending. The play has been a mainstay in the repertoire of theatre ever since.

While often used as a feminist piece, Ibsen himself stated that he wasn't a feminist, but rather that he was a "humanist". As he stated in an interview "...it happens that women make up half of humanity. What I really care about is not feminism, but human freedom and human personality." Nora's decision to confront the hollowness and deceit of her life is a quest that we can all identify with in our own lives. A Doll's House introduced the modern age of theatre and still has meaning in our contemporary lives as well.

With the production of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde in 1879, the theatre changed forever. The play was the first of a new kind, a new kind of drama, a new kind of story. It was a story of a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor. When her husband found out, he had her separated from her children. She was nursing at the time. She was nursing at the time. She was nursing at the time.

Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde was a play about a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor. It was a play about a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor. It was a play about a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor.

It was a play about a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor. It was a play about a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor. It was a play about a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor. It was a play about a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor.

A good woman does a good deed for a good reason. A good woman does a good deed for a good reason. A good woman does a good deed for a good reason. A good woman does a good deed for a good reason. A good woman does a good deed for a good reason.

The effect was to make the theatre a place where the new plays of the day were performed. The theatre was a place where the new plays of the day were performed. The theatre was a place where the new plays of the day were performed. The theatre was a place where the new plays of the day were performed. The theatre was a place where the new plays of the day were performed.

While often used as a metaphor for the human condition, the play is a story of a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor. It was a play about a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor. It was a play about a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor. It was a play about a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor, a man who was a doctor.
